Aging in America Today: The Senior Care Landscape

Home—with its familiar surroundings and memories—truly is where the heart is for most seniors today. According to the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP), 77% of older adults want to age in place, in their own homes, as long as they can.[1] What happens when a senior needs assistance to stay in the home?

Often, seniors turn to family for assistance. Although families want the best for their loved ones, it can be exhausting for family members who have other obligations, such as jobs and growing children.

A great solution for these seniors and their family members is in-home care. This service is provided by professional caregivers hired to help with day-to-day care.

What Is In-Home Care?

In-home care is assistance with instrumental activities of daily living (IADL) and activities of daily living (ADL). This assistance is often provided by trained professionals from agencies like Right at Home. The service is most often performed in a home, but can also be performed wherever a client calls home such as an independent living facility or assisted living facility.

	Instrumental Activities of Daily Living (IADL)	Activities of Daily Living (ADL)
What is it?	Skills needed to live independently	Essential skills to independently care for oneself
What in-home care services are included?	Examples: grocery shopping, planning and preparing meals, light housekeeping, laundry, using transportation, taking medication, wellness support, cognitive stimulation	Examples: moving/mobility, feeding, bathing, dressing, grooming, oral care, toileting

In-Home Care and Home Health – What Is the Difference?

Note that in-home care is not the same as medically prescribed home health care. In-home care provides nonclinical help with IADL and ADL in order for a person to live independently at home. This service is often performed by a caregiver who may have a designation such as CNA (certified nursing assistant), HHA (home health aide), HCA (home care aide) or similar depending on state licensing requirements. The caregiver will often work for a certain number of hours (a shift) and assist with several activities depending on the needs of the client. These services can often be provided on an ongoing basis by the same provider that the senior desires.

Home health provides professional medical care at home to treat a health condition, is prescribed by a doctor, and is performed by clinical staff such as an RN or occupational therapist for an intermittent or specific length of time to help people recover. Home health staff, who most often are in a clinical or skilled position, will visit to perform a medical service such as care for wounds, give injections or IV therapies, or monitor vital signs and progress toward recovery. These services are often only provided for the short episode of time deemed necessary by the attending physician ("episodic care")—ongoing assistance with ADL is not provided.

	In-Home Care	Home Health
Type of Services Performed	Ongoing IADL and ADL support including companionship, homemaking and personal care services to help seniors and adults with disabilities live independently in their home, wherever that may be.	Temporary assistance with ADL, as well as other clinical care such as nursing care, occupational therapy, physical therapy, assistance with use of durable medical equipment, wound care, IVs and injections.
Service Is Performed by	Caregivers (CNAs, HCAs or HHAs, etc.) with oversight from a care manager or registered nurse.	RNs, LPNs, OTs, PTs, other practitioners for specific care management or treatment of a medical condition, and potentially caregivers.
Length/ Frequency of Visits	Shifts typically are a minimum of 3 hours (some have no minimums) as often as needed, up to 24/7 care. A physician's referral is not required. Care can continue as long as it is needed.	Visits are as prescribed by a health care provider. Most often these are intermittent/ short visits on a limited basis to perform certain health care tasks until recovery goals are met. Care continues as long as the health care provider certifies it and eligibility requirements are met.
Examples of Services	Light housekeeping, laundry, cooking, grocery shopping, errands, medication reminders, safety supervision, fall prevention, bathing, dressing, toileting, continence care, lifting, assistance with ambulation, feeding, and dementia, cognitive and hospice supportive care.	Wound care, ostomy care, intravenous therapy, ventilator care, general nursing care, administering medication, and monitoring disease states including vital signs/general health, pain control, and physical and occupational therapy.
How Service Is Paid	Primarily out-of-pocket/family-funded, or long-term care insurance, veterans benefits or other programs as described in this guide.	Out-of-pocket/family-funded, health insurance, veterans benefits, workers' compensation, Medicaid (if qualified) or Medicare (if qualified).
Goal of Service	To improve the quality of life, allow independent living, and in many cases, assist in recovery from an episodic event.	To help with recovery from an illness, injury or surgery, or to treat a chronic health condition. The goal is to help people recover. Once the patient recovers, services will end. If not recovered at some point, the services may be considered "maintenance" and no longer medically necessary, then reimbursement would be denied.

Why In-Home Care?

According to the Home Care Association of America (HCAOA), home care saves patients billions of dollars every year because patients are receiving care in the home rather than at a hospital.[2] The U.S. is experiencing an aging of its population. As life expectancies increase, the prevalence of chronic disease does as well. In addition, the average distance between family members is growing—now the average distance is 280 miles. Plus, families are smaller, which decreases the base of senior support.

In-home care can be the answer for many families as their senior loved one starts to need additional support to ensure their well-being at home. Here are some advantages of in-home care:

- Aging in Place: Statistics show that seniors want to age at home where their memories are and where they are comfortable. Right at Home assists seniors and their families as they navigate the aging journey, helping ensure the senior's well-being and providing assistance on a schedule that meets the needs of the senior and their family, up to 24/7 care.

By the Numbers:
10,000 people in the U.S. turn 65 every day. This growth will continue every year through 2030.[3]

- Monitoring for Change in Condition: Caregivers can be the eyes and ears in the home when family can't be there. Caregivers are trained to observe and report any changes in the condition of a client so preventable hospitalizations can be avoided. During every shift, Right at Home caregivers report any changes so the local office care staff can communicate with the family or any clinical care team members as directed. These changes in condition can involve mobility, cognition, eating, drinking, toileting, worsening symptoms, and skin conditions/swelling, and are reported in an effort to keep minor issues from becoming severe issues down the road.

More than 70% of seniors will need assistance with daily living activities as they age.[4]

- Socialization: Senior loneliness has become an epidemic. According to JAMA Internal Medicine, almost half of all seniors report feeling lonely.[5] An AARP study reported that social isolation among older adults is associated with an estimated $6.7 billion in additional Medicare spending annually.[6] Right at Home's professional in-home caregivers provide an important human connection along with care support, and they can help senior clients stay connected in the community by assisting them with regular social outings they enjoy.

- Dignity: Many independent and assisted living facilities do a good job of creating a nice experience and beautiful surroundings, but they can be impersonal and may not offer the privacy one might want. Shared eating rooms often do not appeal to older adults. In-home care allows a senior to remain at home in familiar surroundings and receive support in just the areas needed, whether that is with meals, hygiene, or only socialization.

- Fall Prevention and General Home Safety: According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), falls are the leading cause of fatal and nonfatal injuries among older adults.[7] A Right at Home professional caregiver in the home can help steady a client, who may be feeling the effects of medication or other conditions, and provide the support they need. A caregiver can also help with light housekeeping and ensure a safe path for the client. A trained caregiver can help ensure a clean and safe home environment, too.

What Is the Cost of In-Home Care?

The cost of in-home care depends on geographic location, licensing requirements, number of care hours and frequency of visits, as well as the types of services needed. Most often the cost is calculated hourly, although occasionally there are packages or bundling of services for certain situations.

According to the 2021 Genworth Cost of Care Survey, the median monthly cost of care provided by a home health aide in the U.S. was $2,340 per week.* For comparison sake, the Genworth study showed that assisted living facilities averaged $4,500 a month, and nursing home facilities (skilled nursing facilities) averaged $9,034 a month for a private room. Actual costs will vary depending on needs and location.

More information about average local costs can be found online by accessing the Genworth cost estimator at www.genworth.com/aging-and-you/finances/cost-of-care.html.

*This is based on an example of 4 hours of care/5 days per week, for a total of 20 hours of care per week. The number of hours of care needed will vary based on services and location.

Funding Sources for In-Home Care

Understanding all of the options for in-home care and how to pay for it can be confusing, especially at a time of stress and concern for a loved one. Right at Home is here to help. We've cared for thousands of families just like yours. There are a variety of ways to pay for in-home care, including:

- Out-of-Pocket/Family-Funded
- Private Insurance/Long-Term Care Insurance
- Long-Term Care Insurance Partnerships
- Whole Life Insurance
- Hybrid Life Insurance
- Viatical Settlement
- Mutual of Omaha Care Funding Solutions Program
- Reverse Mortgages
- Veterans Assistance Programs
- Medicare and Medicaid

Out-of-Pocket/Family-Funded

Out-of-pocket or family-funded is an option for covering the cost of in-home care, and the majority of time, this is the way most families pay for the care of their senior loved one. It includes using savings, retirement funds or pensions, or may involve the sale of assets. A financial adviser can help you and your family decide the best way to tap into financial resources.

There are many other funding options available as well, documented in the pages that follow.

Long-Term Care Insurance

Long-term care insurance policies are a popular way to pay for in-home care. These policies help protect assets by covering the expenses related to personal care up to the preset policy amounts. Depending on the policy and the plan of care, the insurance may assist in paying for a variety of home-based and facility care services. Long-term care policies are individualized and provide a large range of benefits depending on your preferences. Consult a trusted insurance broker prior to investing in a long-term care insurance policy, as it is imperative to understand all aspects of the policy and the cost ratio to ensure it would be beneficial to you and your needs.

Long-Term Care Insurance Partnerships

Most states participate in the Long-Term Care Insurance Partnership program. This program is a joint federal-state initiative designed to encourage planning for long-term care, and it allows policyholders to retain their assets rather than take the typical route in which they sell off assets to qualify for Medicaid. In most cases, you can participate if you own a long-term care policy that meets the requirements.

For more information, consult a trusted insurance broker.

Whole Life Insurance

Using funds from whole life insurance policies to pay for in-home care may help cover the cost of care. Whole life policies build cash value over time; therefore, it is possible to borrow from the policy without surrendering it. Check with your insurance agent for help with getting cash from your policy, and to learn what the provisions are for repayment.

Hybrid Life Insurance

A hybrid life insurance policy combines life insurance and long-term care insurance. Check with your insurance company to see if payment for in-home care services is available through your or your loved one's policy.

Viatical Settlement (Life Insurance Settlement)

Viatical settlement may be an option for life insurance policyholders who need in-home care. A viatical settlement is the sale of a policy owner's existing life insurance policy to a third party for more than its cash surrender value, but less than its net death benefit. Such a sale provides the policy owner with a lump sum. Generally, the amount paid is 50% to 70% of the policy's value.

The buyer becomes the new owner of the life insurance policy, pays future premiums, and collects the death benefit when the insured dies.

Before selling your policy, be sure to investigate the purchaser, as there are unscrupulous buyers in the marketplace. You should check with your state insurance department and the National Association of Insurance Commissioners to ensure you have the facts before you sell your life insurance policy. For more information on viatical settlement, visit: www.insureuonline.org/consumer_life_viaticals.htm.

Reverse Mortgages

Reverse mortgage loans allow homeowners to borrow against the equity in their home with the home serving as security for the loan. Unlike a traditional home loan, the borrower does not have to repay the amount borrowed. The loan is repaid when the homeowner no longer lives in the home. Keep in mind that interest and fees are added to the loan balance monthly and the home equity decreases. Additionally, homeowners are obligated to pay property taxes, live in the home, and possess homeowners insurance.

There are several types of reverse mortgages, the most common being a home equity conversion mortgage (HECM). Homeowners aged 62 and older are eligible to take out an HECM. HECMs are insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

Some lenders also may offer proprietary reverse mortgages. The federal government does not insure this type of loan.

A single-purpose reverse mortgage can only be used for the purpose specified by the lender. The loans are generally for payment of taxes and home improvements. The loans are not offered in all areas of the country. Single-purpose reverse mortgages are offered by nonprofit organizations and state and local governments. For more information, visit www.consumer.ftc.gov/articles/reverse-mortgages.

Veterans Assistance Programs

The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) offers various programs to veterans and their families to help pay for in-home care. Millions of qualifying veterans and their surviving spouses do not access these programs simply because they are not aware of them or do not know how to access them. Qualification criteria apply to each program, so if you are a veteran or surviving spouse, you will need to speak directly with the VA to determine your eligibility. These programs include:

- Veterans Pension With Aid and Attendance Benefit (A&A): Veterans with periods of wartime service and their surviving spouses who need in-home care services may qualify for Veterans Aid and Attendance benefits. This program provides supplemental income for eligible veterans and surviving spouses who are receiving care either at home or in a senior living facility. If qualified, this program pays a monthly amount that is added to the veteran's pension or survivor's pension. Honorably discharged veterans and their surviving spouses may be eligible. To find out more, visit www.AidAndAttendance.com, or visit the VA website at www.va.gov/pension/aid-attendance-housebound. A local veterans service officer can provide free assistance in applying for this benefit. You can find the nearest one to you at www.nacvso.org/find_service_officers.

  There are a few organizations that can assist a veteran with ensuring they have the documentation the VA requires in order to receive the Pension With Aid and Attendance benefit. Veterans are welcome to contact:

  - Veterans Care Coordination (VCC): Veterans can purchase their home care services from the VCC. The documentation of the provision of these services can be used by the veteran to ensure they comply with the rules of the pension. For more information, visit www.vcchc.com, or check with your local Right at Home office to find out if they participate in the VCC program.

  - Veterans Home Care (VHC): Veterans can purchase their home care services from the VHC. The documentation of the provision of these services can be used by the veteran to ensure they comply with the rules of the pension. For more information, visit www.veteranshomecare.com.

  - Patriot Angels: Patriot Angels has a VA-accredited attorney who helps ensure veterans have the documentation needed to support the application submitted by the veteran. For more information, visit www.patriotangels.com.

- Homemaker and Home Health Aide Care: Veterans who have medical needs and an attending physician at a VA hospital may receive a prescription for 16 hours of in-home care per week. Home care agencies contract with the VA's network to provide personal care services and help with activities of daily living (ADL). All enrolled veterans are eligible if they are eligible for community care and meet the clinical criteria for the service. For more information, visit https://www.va.gov/geriatrics/pages/Homemaker_and_Home_Health_Aide_Care.asp

- Veterans Long-Term Care Services: Services are available at home and in the community as part of the medical benefits package from the VA. All enrolled veterans are eligible; however, these services are based on a medically necessary need. Enrolled in VA health care means you have applied for veterans benefits and are receiving care currently through a VA facility. You are not automatically enrolled because you receive financial compensation from the military including VA disability. Services may include free medical care consisting of prescription drugs, orthotics and prosthetics; home renovation grants for disabilities; home care; assisted living; domiciliary care; nursing home care; and a host of other benefits for long-term care needs and services. For more information, visit www.va.gov/health-care/how-to-apply.

- VA's Program of Comprehensive Assistance for Family Caregivers: As of the date of this publication, the VA was set to expand this benefit on October 1, 2022 to cover caregivers of veterans who served after May 7, 1975, and before September 11, 2001, making veterans of all eras eligible to apply. There are eligibility requirements that must be met. Eligible primary family caregivers can receive a stipend, training, mental health services and travel reimbursement, along with access to health insurance (if not already covered under a health care plan). For additional information on this program, contact your local VA medical facility and speak to a caregiver support coordinator. Or, visit www.caregiver.va.gov/support/support_benefits.asp. You may also call 1-877-222-VETS (8387).

For more information about eligibility for programs offered by the VA, visit https://www.va.gov/pension.

Medicare

Medicare Parts A and B do not pay for ongoing assistance with ADL. ADL is called “custodial care” in the exclusions of Medicare plans. There is a home health aide benefit that allows payment for home health services that have been identified as skilled services provided by a health care professional. These services are provided on a limited basis in response to acute need and include nursing care, physical therapy and occupational therapy.

Medicare Advantage (also called “Part C”) may cover some services in the home (referred to as "in-home support"). Private insurance companies that offer Medicare Advantage plans have the ability to design the types of coverage they will provide beyond the home health aide Medicare benefit. There may be additional requirements for these types of coverage such as prior authorization and health care provider orders.

To understand the benefits of Medicare, visit www.medicare.gov.

Medicaid

Medicaid is a state and federal partnership. Medicaid coverage for in-home care will vary from state to state. Your local Right at Home can answer questions regarding your state’s coverage for in-home care. You may also visit your state’s website. For a complete listing of addresses, visit www.medicaid.gov/state-overviews/index.html. For general Medicaid information, visit www.medicaid.gov.

Home- and community-based services (HCBS) waiver programs are another form of Medicaid benefits. Unlike regular Medicaid coverage, these plans are generally not limited to medical care, and the coverage does not run out when an individual’s condition stabilizes. These programs may provide in-home health care, personal care services, homemaker services, meal delivery, transportation assistance to medical appointments, adult day care services, and minor home modifications and assistive devices including medical equipment and supplies. Eligibility for these programs is divided into two parts: (1) the need for care and (2) an applicant’s income (including some assets). In some states, these programs allow payment to a family member to care for the beneficiary. For more information, contact your state Medicaid office. You can find a list at www.medicaid.gov/state-overviews/index.html.

Important Questions To Ask When Choosing an In-Home Care Provider

Choosing an in-home care provider is one of the most important decisions you'll make, so we understand you'll have many questions along the way. As you research your in-home care options, it is vital to know all the facts. Right at Home suggests to ask the questions listed on the next page and any others for which you would like answers.

You may be tempted to directly hire a private/independent caregiver or use a registry to save money. But with that option comes many tasks, and if they aren't completed accurately and promptly, you could be at significant risk. The following is a list of some of these tasks, along with how Right at Home handles them for you, which minimizes your risk:

- Liability Insurance: Right at Home ensures every caregiver is bonded/insured including workers' compensation insurance should a caregiver get injured in your home. When working with an independent caregiver not employed by a home care agency, you would take on that burden and incur the risk should an injury occur.

- Background Checks: Every Right at Home caregiver is screened including criminal and background checks. They are also trained before they ever step into a home to provide care.

- Immigrant Status: Right at Home verifies that the employee can legally work in the U.S. and documents the required paperwork to protect you from incurring any liability.

- Federal, State and Social Security Taxes: Right at Home handles all of these taxes so you don't need to worry about them at all. State and federal governments take wage and tax violations very seriously. Are you willing to get in trouble with the IRS?

- Care Oversight: Every Right at Home office has a care manager who directly oversees the care plan and supervises the caregiver. Supervisory home visits are conducted to ensure the level of care is up to our standards. And, should your caregiver not be able to perform a shift, oftentimes a backup caregiver can take their place so you don't have any lapse in care. Should you ever have a question about your caregiver, you will have an agency to call for assistance.

Whether you are in the planning stages or you need immediate care, you don't want to spend your time managing the financial and legal obligations of employing a caregiver. With Right at Home, you don't have to. Trust Right at Home to be your care partner. Let us help you navigate the road ahead.

Registry: Sometimes called a "private duty registry," "independent contractor agency" or "staffing service," a registry is an employment service for home care workers. Registries refer, but do not hire, home care workers. They serve as middlemen, providing families with a list of possible candidates for the job. They charge a finder's fee: Once the worker is hired, the relationship usually ends. When you hire from a registry, you may become the caregiver's employer, and you might have to assume certain responsibilities, risks and liabilities.

Direct Hire: Also referred to as a "private/independent caregiver," a direct hire is a caregiver directly employed by the senior (or family member). The family/care recipient becomes the employer and takes on the responsibilities of managing payroll and tax withholding, including possibly paying Social Security, Medicare and unemployment taxes as an employer.

What Help Does Your Loved One Need?

If you need help, you're not alone. Whether an older loved one lives next door or hundreds of miles away, Right at Home provides caregiving services for thousands of families across the nation. We can help you and your family, too!

Below is a needs assessment worksheet to help you identify the needs of your loved one. It can serve as a guide to help you determine whether or not it's time to hire a professional caregiver. If it is, then you can use this information as you interview potential in-home care agencies. It may also be useful to consider these questions:

- Has there been a fall or hospitalization in the last 12 months?
- Is assistance needed with bathing, toileting or dressing?
- Does the person take more than 4 medications?
- Does the individual need assistance removing medication from bottles or pill boxes?
- Does the person use any assistive devices (walker, cane, wheelchair, etc.)?
- Would assistance be needed to evacuate in case of emergency? (Can the individual be left alone?)
